
are many fascinating worlds to explore. The best way to explore them is to create your own by putting graphics into the screen saver, and that's just what we did with this collection of beautiful examples. Screen savers aren't just about graphics either, they are an opportunity to share some fun with the computer or your friends. You can show them off, scare them, inform them, or just have a little fun. Many of these screen savers are freeware, but most are shareware, which means that they are free to download and use, but if you like them you can usually purchase them. Either way, you can make your own unique screensavers easily, and it's not hard to put your own graphics and special effects into one. It's still possible to make a screensaver on Linux, but you will have to use some graphical tools. However, that's not to say that you can't make a beautiful one just as easily. Many of the screen savers on this collection are made using just a few easy steps, and most are in a format that you can even use on Linux. Some are even made on Linux, such as the Free Discman, Chameleon, and Free Floppy. That's not to say that other tools are not available for Linux users. There are many other free screensavers available in other languages, but if you want to explore the world of Linux screen savers you can't go wrong with this collection of beautiful examples. You can see many of the screen savers that are included on this collection on the Screensavers page of the www.shareware-freedom.org site, and that's a good place to find other Linux-compatible screensavers.
